"BUNGALOW BOOBS"

By Hal E. Roach.

Jimmie Jump and his bride settle down in a new bungalow surrounded by shrubbery and covered by a mortgage. It cost Jimmy every dollar he had saved in ten years. Their first evening -- neighbors called en masse to wish them well. Among the visitors was a builder who proved that the construction of the bungalow was cheap by pulling everything to pieces. What the building doesn't ruin, the other guests -- especially the children--do. At last they go home and Jimmie and his bride disconsolately sit down on the only thing their visitors missed -- the piano bench. But it collapses under them and leaves them sorrowing in the midst of the ruins.
